The Three little fish and the big bad shark

By John Angelis

Once upon a time there were three little fish that were all friends. One day a big bad shark saw the three little fish and wanted to eat them up. The fish swam to their houses. One house was made of seaglass, one house was made of cobblestone, and one house was made of aqua-brick.

The first house was easily chomped down and destroyed by the big bad shark. The fish who lived in the seaglass house swam as fast as he could to the second house. The big bad shark chomped down on the second house too, which broke the house. The two little fish whose houses were destroyed swam to the third house.

The shark tried to chomp down the third house, but he could not do it. The aqua-brick was too strong. When the big bad shark tried to chomp down on the aqua-brick, he broke some teeth. The three little fish were safe in the third house.

Then the big bad shark had an idea. He thought that if he came down the chimney, he would be able to eat the fish. His plan did not work because the three little fish put a pot with boiling water in the fireplace. The water cooked the big bad shark, and the three little fish ate him up. The End
